

Divorcee Shoots Ex-Mokena Officer

EDWARD SCHENKEL KILLED IN SENSATIONAL UNREQUITED LOVE CASE

Edward Schenkel, aged 51 years, former Mokena police chief and alderman for a number of years, was shot and killed Monday afternoon in a tavern at 669 Cass street in Joliet by Mrs. Eleanor Smith Hoover, 52, attractive divorcee, who also committed suicide by shooting herself in the head after she fired the fatal shot at Schenkel.

Mr. Schenkel was a widower, his wife dying during the flu epidemic in 1918. He has been employed of late years as a mail sorter at the La Salle street station in Chicago.

He met Mrs. Hoover about two years ago when both were living at the home of Mrs. Ruby Garrison, 302 North Collins Street. Mrs. Hoover who was twice divorced, had threatened to kill Schenkel because he refused to marry her, according to Mrs. Garrison.

Mrs. Hoover was in Mokena East Sunday with Mr. Schenkel and both visited at the home of Mr. Schenkel's daughter, Mrs. Walter Spiess. Mrs. Hoover brought Easter eggs and bunnies for the grand children of Mr. Schenkel. It is reported at that time she told Mrs. Spiess that if she could not marry the latter's father no one else would get the chance either, but no attention was paid to her remarks.

Monday afternoon when Mr. Schenkel went to the tavern on Cass he was trailed there by the divorcee. An argument ensued when Mrs. Hoover asked Mr. Schenkel if he was going to marry her and he said "No." She asked the same question several times and received the same answer. Finally Mr. Schenkel is said to have remarked "I am through, I am going back to Chicago" and left the tavern.

Mrs. Hoover also left and is supposed to have gone to a second hand store and purchased a revolver.

Schenkel in the meantime changed his mind about going back to Chicago and returned to the tavern and was seated at a table in a rear room when his insanely jealous sweetheart entered and asked him again if he was going to marry her and he said "No" again. As he arose from the table he put his hands in his pockets and then started to walk away and as he did so, the divorcee suddenly drew her gun and fired point blank at her erstwhile lover, the bullet entering his skull over the left eye. Schenkel fell to the floor uttering a groan. Death apparently was instant.

Then placing the gun to her temple, the love crazed woman pulled the trigger and fell dying on the body of the man she evidently desperately loved.

The arguments were heard and the sensational murder and suicide was witnessed by Mrs. Ruby Garrison, a waitress at the tavern, who testified at the coroner's inquest on Wednesday that Mrs. Hoover had demanded a show down from her lover as to the reason why he was jilting her.

"Why did you follow me here?" Schenkel was heard to say as the two sat in the back room of the tavern.

"You're going to tell me why you're thru with me," the divorcee was heard to reply by Mrs. Garrison.

Following the murder and suicide the Joliet authorities were called. Mrs. Walter Spiess of Mokena was notified of the tragedy and identified her father's body which was removed to the West End Funeral Home in Chicago Heights.

Mrs. Hoover had expected death, although not in the form in which it came. She also left evidence that the murder of her sweetheart had not been premeditated for any length of time.

She left a note, found by Dr. E. A. Kingston, Will County coroner, dated March 14 of this year.

Complaining of a bad heart and other ailments, she indicated that she did not expect a natural span of life. Although the woman was on relief, she said in the letter that she had an estate of $1,100 all of which she wanted spent on her funeral.

Mrs. Hoover said that her life had been a hard one. She told in the letter of her marriage to Jonas Smith and of a daughter, Laura, by that marriage who died.

She asked that in case of her death Edward Schenkel be notified and said that when he, as the lone mourner, stood by her coffin, "he will know the meaning of the three greatest words in the world—I Love You."

Mrs. Hoover is survived by several brothers and sisters. Christian Science funeral services were held for her at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon at the Sonntag funeral parlors in Joliet. Interment took place in Elmhurst cemetery, Joliet.

Funeral services for Mr. Schenkel were held at the West End Funeral Parlors in Chicago Heights Thursday afternoon with the Rev. Theo. Haeftle, pastor of the St. John Evangelical church of Mokena officiating. Quite a number of Mokena people attended the funeral. Interment took place in the St. John cemetery south of Mokena.

Edward Schenkel was the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Schenkel and was born in Mokena in

Mrs. W. H. Whitmore of Wilmington, was the principal speaker of the afternoon, speaking on the theme of the day "Keeping One's Balance". Some of the high lights of her discourse were: "We must use the power of God in our life; the standards of life are found in the Bible, read and study it; we must live in this world, but we must not cast our life in its mold; we must find the right attitude of life and then live by it."

Mrs. Whitmore was a very interesting speaker and held the attention of her audience during the entire period of her address.

The meeting was closed with the benediction offered by Rev. C. F. Schellhase, pastor of the Frankfort M. E. church.

Operetta Is A Colorful Affair

A splendid entertainment was given last Friday evening in the Mokena school auditorium, under the direction of Mrs. Eleanor Ferguson and Miss Mildred Doig, teachers of the intermediate and primary grades. The affair was an operetta entitled, "The Land of Dreams Come True". Pupils of the first six grades took part in it, which meant the training of 111 children.

It was quite a stupendous task for these teachers to train so many children and they showed their high degree of artistry in presentation as there was not a mistake and not one forgot their part. The singing of the children was splendid. Each one spoke distinctly and loud and could therefore be plainly heard.

The costumes, many of them of colored crepe paper, representing, different flowers and fairy story characters, added to the attractiveness of the affairs.

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, "Penelope," in an effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. At a baseball game a ball strikes ten-year-old Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for her when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, rising young psychiatrist, is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" is in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a criminal and obtains Burt's testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is also won over. Nance's criminal record outweighs Doctor Burt's explanation of her case and she is sent to San Quentin penitentiary. Lanny visits her and Nance persuades her to smuggle out a letter, which a confederate of Nance steals. Nance escapes, although shot, and goes to Lanny's apartment. From one of the men in the boat on which the girl escaped McNamara learns that Nance's real name is Penelope Gatlin. He also discovers that Penelope Gatlin is heiress to $750,000.

"She had leased the house Gatlin gave her in the divorce settlement, and about two years ago, when the lease expired and the old tenants departed, she came down here to have the place renovated and secure a new tenant. It was only then that she heard of Gatlin's death. She came to this bank, with her husband, making inquiries about Gatlin's estate, and tried hard to get control of it, but she was out of luck. That's how we located the heir."

"What were the conditions of the trust?"

"The income was to be permitted to accumulate and be reinvested and the child was to have two hundred and fifty dollars a month until her eighteenth birthday, when the total income from the trust was to be turned over to her. She can never touch the principal, however, although Gatlin did provide that she might have up to ten thousand dollars of it at any one time if, in the judgment of the trustee, the emergency requiring such withdrawal was deemed good and sufficient. Gatlin had faith that the real estate, if held long enough, would appreciate tremendously—and it has. The trust is now worth three-quarters of a million and the income is close to twenty thousand a year."

"You say Penelope Gatlin has a checking account also?"

"Yes. We deposit the income from the trust semi-annually, in her account."

"Has she ever asked for an emergency withdrawal of ten thousand dollars?"

"No."

"Is her checking account active?"

"Not very. The cashier was speaking to me about it less than two weeks ago. She draws checks sporadically. Her checking account has interested us considerably for the past two years, because her monthly statement and dead checks have all been returned by the post office. With the exception of about a dozen checks made out to local merchants and probably in payment of her bills, Miss Gatlin's checks have all been in favor of one Ella Cates, of San Francisco. We traced the Cates woman down through the endorsements on the checks, but she stated she didn't know Miss Gatlin's address; that Miss Gatlin visited her occasionally, wrote out checks and asked her to cash them for her at the local grocery store or drug store. These people stated that Ella Cates never received the money at once, but that they collected the checks for her and then gave her the money. I don't like the looks of this, Chief."

"I'll soon find out all about it," McNamara promised. "And I know where Penelope Gatlin is—only I'm not going to tell you now. Would you mind letting me look over her old bank statements and the dead checks?"

The banker readily granted him the privilege, and McNamara went through the checks carefully, noting those drawn in favor of Ella Cates. The last one drawn was in favor of a man named Hugh P. Taylor, in sum of five thousand dollars, and deposited by him to the credit of his account in the Federal Trust company of San Francisco.

"I have all the information I want, with this exception," He drew forth one of the rogue's gallery photographs made at the central station by the police photographer. "Is that Penelope Gatlin?"

"That's the girl, Chief. Is she in trouble with the police?"

Dan McNamara laughed. "Not at all. She's the sweetest little thing on earth. The only trouble she's been in is that she's been lost. Amnesia. Can't remember who she is or anything about her past life. Has several aliases she uses at will."

"How interesting—and how sad."

"Neither interesting nor sad—to me. We handle lots of cases like this. They're curable. You'll be good enough to regard this interview as strictly confidential, of course. It would be very embarrassing for the girl if news of her unfortunate predicament should leak out, for, of course, after her mind has been restored to its normal functions, she will have no memory of the period in which she has been lost. I know a doctor that will fix her up in jig time."

"And after he's done that," the banker suggested, "have a plastic surgeon fix up her nose. She used to be as lovely as a violet."

"Sorry about the nose," McNamara lied, "but I've had the best plastic surgeons in town examine it and there's no hope." He held out his hand. "Thanks for your courtesy. You've been a great help. Meanwhile, don't send out any more of those bank statements and dead checks. Mum's the word."

Back in San Francisco, McNamara went directly to the city prison and looked over the blotter to see what strange fish his men had brought in during his absence.

He found a woman, an old offender, booked for drunkenness, and ordered her sent to his office. When she arrived he locked the door, and fingerprinted her on the appropriate card, after which he lectured her on the error of her ways. Then he went upstairs to the identification bureau and asked the filing clerk to have pointed out to him the filing cabinets containing criminal records for the years 1914-15 and 1916.

He was searching for a face that was photographed on his remarkable memory, and at last he found it. It was that of a young woman, black-haired and with a "saddle" nose, but not quite so badly deformed as Nance Belden's nor did the contour of the face resemble Nance Belden's. However, since the original of that photograph had, to the chief's knowledge, been dead six months, he decided it would do. He slipped this record into his breast pocket and went back to his office. Here he carefully removed the three photographs from the card to which they were pasted in a row across the top. Below the row of photographs appeared the typewritten criminal history of the subject and in appropriate spaces on the reverse of the card appeared the subject's fingerprints.

McNamara picked up the fresh card, upon the reverse of which he had fingerprinted the woman who at times drank too much. He placed this card in the typewriter of his secretary, who had gone for the day, and carefully filled it in with Nance Belden's criminal record. Then he pasted over the top of this record the three photographs of the dead woman he had taken from the old files, carefully burned all the evidence of the substitution, went upstairs and handed the record to the clerk, who replaced it in the files.

Promptly at six-thirty a knock sounded on his door, and to his hearty "come," Messrs. P. Flynn and A. Angellotti entered.

"I sent for you two boys to tell you in no uncertain terms to lay off Miss Rebecca Lanning," the chief began. "However, I owe it to you to tell you why. Miss Lanning is a friend of mine of long standing, and I know she is a worthy and dependable woman and absolutely truthful. She isn't interested in this girl, Nance Belden. It happened this way. I regarded that girl as a nut, see—and I haven't any confidence in the bone that does our medico-legal work. So I took Nance up to see Dr. Stephen Burt. Miss Lanning is his nurse. She was very kind to the girl—very understanding—and the Belden brat got stuck on her. She has an affection complex, understand."

Flynn and Angellotti had had to listen, many a time and oft, to Dan McNamara's dissertations on complexes in prisoners. They nodded languidly now.

"Apparently," the chief continued, "Nance hasn't any friends. The poor lonely kid remembered Miss Lanning, so she wrote and asked her to visit her in the pen—and now the warden swears she smuggled out of San Quentin a letter with Nance's plan of escape. Well, maybe she did, but if she did, Miss Lanning didn't know it."

"Now, when the Belden girl came to Miss Lanning's home she realized she couldn't harbor her. Within a minute after the girl entered, Miss Lanning had me on the phone."

"I've just heard a thump out in the hall," says she. "I think the girl's faint. Better let me put her to bed, Chief, and have Doctor Burt come over to bandage her wound; then the ambulance can call for her in the morning."

"I thought that was a good idea. When she came back Nance was just going out of the door. Miss Lanning tried to stop her, but her boy friends were still waiting, and grabbed her and beat it. The trouble was that Miss Lanning thought the girl was unconscious but Nance heard her and beat it. Now it's up to you two to find her."

"How long have you known Miss Lanning?"

"Quite a while," McNamara lied. "Well, even if she is a friend of yours, Chief, she's no clinging vine."

"Well, leave her alone from now on and don't waste your time watching her house. The Belden devil won't come back there again. Another thing. We have criminals loose in our midst who are more important than a poor nut of a girl that only swiped a mess of silk stockings, so don't get excited and waste much time. That will be all, boys."

Outside of Chief McNamara's office door, Detective Sergeants Flynn and Angellotti looked at each other meaningfully.

"He's up to his old tricks, Amadeo."

"Always feeling sorry for the under dog, Pat. He makes me sick."

"I'll bet a month's salary he knows where the Belden girl is this minute."

"I'm not quitting such a hot scent, Pat."

"We'll just split that two hundred and fifty-dollar reward—and see how the chief likes it. That old Lanny girl warned us to step softly or she'd have us broke, didn't she? Well, where does she get her drag with the old man?"

A. Angellotti jumped to the natural conclusion of his kind. "She's got something on him, I suppose."

"Sure she has. She knows he knows where she's hid the body."

"We've got to see the Belden girl's photograph and thumb prints and Bertillon measurements. They're in the upper office."

They went up to the identification bureau, called for the record of Nance Belden and studied it for a couple of minutes.

"I'd recognize that dame now if she was burned to ashes," Thus Angellotti.

Flynn drew his partner into a corner. "The girl was wounded. We know that from the guard that shot her and we're sure of it after looking at the blood in that speedboat."

"If she'd bled that much all by herself she'd never have gotten ashore under her own power, Pat. I'm inclined to think one of the crew got hit, too."

"There's hope for the dagoes yet, my boy. You're right. It stands to reason some doctor fixed them up. Now, then, what doctor?"

"Dr. Stephen Burt," Angellotti decided.

"It stands to reason that if this Doctor Burt dressed their wounds last night he'll call on his patients every day until they're out of danger. If we catch him at his dirty work there ought to be a little something in this on the side, Amadeo."

P. Flynn thought that a thousand each would be a very modest sum to charge Stephen Burt for their silence—very modest.

An hour later they pulled up in front of Stephen's house, and behind a coupe parked at the curb. Flynn, circling around it, noticed a red cross on the radiator.

They circled the block and returned, to park at the lower end of the block. At a quarter past eight they saw Stephen come out, bag in hand, enter his coupe, and drive away. So they followed him and came, in time, to Dan McNamara's house, into which they saw him enter, as they rolled slowly past.

"He had a latch key. He didn't ring the bell. An' no lights in the front of the house," Angellotti cried excitedly. "Drive back, Pat, and I'll get the number."

"That house," Flynn informed him dramatically, "is the habitat of His Royal Highness, Daniel McNamara, Chief of Police of San Francisco. I always knew he was a fox, but I never suspected he was fool enough to hide an escaped convict in his own house."

Angellotti was excited, but like all smart Italians he was not impulsive except when he was in a fight, or angry. "This pinch will keep several nights, because some of these birds ain't in no condition to be moved. This situation is ticklish an' requires calm an' mature deliberation."

"Maybe you're right at that, Amadeo. Well, we'll stick round a while."

They stuck around half an hour before Doctor Burt came out, and drove away. "Drop off an' watch the house," Flynn suggested to his partner, "an' I'll follow his nips. I'll be back later."

He trailed Stephen Burt to the latter's home and saw him pull up across the sidewalk, preparatory to opening the door of his garage. So Flynn rolled past, circled, picked up Angellotti at the end of the block.

"After you an' the doc left, I went up to the corner drug store and phoned the chief's house, but nobody answered," Angellotti confided. "The gang's in there, all right."

"I'm as nervous as an old woman," Flynn confessed. "I wish I had a drink."

SIN, REPENTANCE, AND FAITH

LESSON TEXT—Luke 15:11-24.

GOLDEN TEXT—If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.—1 John 1:9.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When a Boy Was Sorry.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus' Story of the Prodigal Son.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—When We Do Wrong.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Forgiveness of Sin.

I. The Origin of Sin (Gen. 3:1-24).

Man was placed on probation in the Garden of Eden. The means used in the testing of man were most simple. God issued just one prohibition, and alongside of the tree of knowledge of good and evil was placed the tree of life. To this tree man had access. Satan, a personal being, appeared in the guise of a serpent. He induced Eve to doubt both the Word of God and the love of God and then appealed to innocent appetite. She gazed upon and lusted after that which God had forbidden. Following her yielding to the suggestion of Satan, she induced Adam to disobey God. We see from this that so far as the human race is concerned sin originated in the free choice of the head of the race and through the law of heredity passed upon all mankind.

II. The Universality of Sin (Rom. 3:10-18).

By the use of many quotations from the Scriptures, Paul proves that every member of the race is guilty of sin.

III. The Destiny of Sinners (Gen. 6:5-8).

Man's rebellious disobedience to God was followed by his resolution to destroy the race from the face of the earth. God's holy nature is such that the sinner must be punished. The only escape from the wrath of God is through the Savior who was provided by God in the person of his Son.

IV. The Divine Remedy for Sin (John 3:14, 15; Isa. 53:4-9).

The sinless Son of God took the place of the sinner by becoming incorporated with the race through the incarnation. As a human being he rendered perfect obedience to the law of God, fulfilling every demand and on the cross of Calvary made a vicarious atonement for sin. Just as the Israelites who were bitten by the venomous serpent were healed by looking to the brazen serpent lifted upon the pole, so is the sinner saved from sin by looking to the one who was made a curse for sin in his sacrifice on Calvary (II Cor. 5:21).

V. Repentance Necessary (Acts 2:32-39).

The one who hears the gospel message and receives the crucified Savior not only has forgiveness of sin, but turns from sin to God and thus repents. On the Day of Pentecost Peter's gospel message, which centered in the Lordship and Saviorhood of Jesus Christ, convicted the people of their sins. The evidence of their faith in Christ was manifested in their conviction of sin and their repentance was shown in their confession of Christ in baptism.

VI. The Forgiving God (Luke 15:11-24).

The center of things in this parable is neither the prodigal son nor his brother, but the "certain man who had two sons." He who fails to see the heart of our Father God will miss the purpose of this parable.

1. The son's insubordination (vv. 12). The son's desire for freedom moved him wilfully to choose to leave home.

2. The son's departure (v. 13). Having made the fatal decision, he went posthaste to the enjoyment of his cherished purpose.

3. The son's degeneration (vv. 13, 14). From plenty in his father's house to destitution in a far country was a short journey. The sinner realizes his destitution when the very powers which minister to his pleasures are burned out.

4. The son's degradation (vv. 15, 16). When his money was exhausted, he was driven to hire out to a citizen to feed swine. It is ever so, that those who will not serve God are made slaves to the devil (Rom. 6:16).

5. The son's restoration (vv. 17-24). a. He came to himself (v. 17). b. He made a resolution (v. 18). c. He made a confession (vv. 18, 19). d. He acted (v. 20). e. Reception by his father (vv. 20-24).

The father had not forgotten his son. So anxious was he for him that he ran to meet him and fell upon his neck and kissed him.

VII. Justification by Issue of Faith (Rom. 5:1-11).

The one who receives Jesus Christ is declared righteous. His guilt is removed; he has peace with God.

Ordeals

The hardest of all ordeals for an honest man is to stand arraigned at the bar of his own conscience. He knows more than the keenest, the most vindictive enemy could urge for a verdict of guilty.

Charity

A man's charity to those who differ from him upon great and difficult questions will be in the ratio of his own knowledge of them, the more knowledge, the more charity.—Norman McLeod.

Hot Breads and Fine Cakes

Baking Powder Has Important Part in the Preparation of These Typical American Foods, but It Must Be Employed Wisely.

Hot breads and fine cakes are typical American foods. Modern cook books, magazines and newspapers devote much space to directions for their preparation. Cook books of an older time, however, furnish few recipes for these dainties because "yeast powder," as baking powder was first known, is a comparatively modern invention. In these older recipes we find directions for the use of soda and cream of tartar or vinegar, molasses or sour milk. Modern recipes use the two latter ingredients with soda, but most of them add as well a little baking powder in order to overcome the inconsistency of the varying acids.

Baking powders, of which we have three types, are all made of a soda base, but the acid, which is the other principal ingredient, differs. The three types of baking powder are known as combination, phosphates and tartrates. To be successful with a recipe which calls for baking powder you should know what type of baking powder you are using. The phosphates and tartrates demand more in comparison to the amount of flour than does the combination. Experiments made at the University of Chicago show that in most recipes about two-thirds as much combination baking powder should be used in most recipes. Other experiments show that for muffins, biscuits and cakes, excepting where extra eggs are used, the proportion of one teaspoonful to a cupful of flour gives generally good results. In using phosphate or tartrate baking powders, the proportion for cakes is generally one and a half teaspoonfuls to a cupful of flour. For biscuits one and a half to two teaspoonfuls to a cupful of flour, according to the type of crumb you wish. For absolutely accurate results, it is a very good idea to use the tested recipes supplied by the companies which manufacture each type of baking powder.

The use of too much baking powder produces a porous, coarse, dry crumb with a cracked, sticky crust. A great excess will make a cake fall. If too much baking powder is used, your product may have a slightly bitter taste. Too little baking powder produces a heavy cake, which has a rather bread-like consistency.

When sour cream is used, we particularly need baking powder as well as soda, unless we use another acid, because there is not so much acid in sour cream as there is in sour milk. It takes one-quarter of a teaspoonful of soda to produce leaven with one cupful of sour milk, but a cupful of sour cream needs only a quarter of a teaspoonful of soda to neutralize the acid, and we do not get so large a proportion of gas to raise our mixture. Because chocolate has a slight acid reaction many recipes for this favorite cake demand a small amount of soda, which produces a dark color and makes a tender cake. Let me warn you that an over-use of soda produces an unpleasant flavor and a slightly soapy texture.

The improvement in the prepared cake and biscuit mixtures is largely due to the scientific combination of the baking powder as well as to the good quality of flour, shortening and other ingredients used. One of the prepared gingerbreads on the market claims to have been developed from the recipe used by Mary Washington, whose son provided a birthday worthy of an annual celebration.

Standard White Cake.

2 cups flour
3 teaspoons tartrate or phosphate baking powder or 1½ teaspoons combination baking powder
½ cup butter or other shortening
1 cup sifted sugar
¾ cup milk
1 teaspoon vanilla
3 egg whites, beaten light

Prepare pan. Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and sift again together. Cream shortening thoroughly, then add sugar gradually and cream together until light and fluffy. Add sifted flour and baking powder to creamed mixture, alternately with milk, a small amount at a time. Beat after each addition until smooth. Add vanilla, fold in egg whites. Bake in loaf or layers in moderate oven. (Loaf, one hour, 350 degrees Fahrenheit; layer, twenty to twenty-five minutes, 375 degrees Fahrenheit).

Devil's Food Cake.

1 cup butter
¾ cup white sugar
2 cups brown sugar
3 egg yolks
3 whole eggs
2 cups flour
1 teaspoon tartrate or phosphate baking powder or ½ teaspoon combination baking powder
1 teaspoon soda
1 cup sour milk
2 cups coconut
6 squares chocolate

Cream the butter and sugar together, add egg yolks. Beat well and add one-fourth of the mixed flour, soda and baking powder. Add unbeaten eggs, beat well and add the rest of the flour alternately with the sour milk. Add coconut and chocolate melted and bake in three layers or in three small loaf cake pans, thirty to forty minutes in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit). This cake will keep moist a week. Frost with boiled frosting, using three egg whites left from cake.

Baking Powder Biscuits.

2 cups flour
4 teaspoons tartrate or phosphate baking powder or 2 teaspoons combination baking powder
2 tablespoons fat
½ to 1 cup milk or water
¼ teaspoon salt

Mix and sift the dry ingredients and rub in the fat with the fingers or cut it in with a knife. Make a hole in the flour at the side of the bowl and add half a cupful of liquid. Add enough more liquid to make a soft dough. Roll on a metal surface or oiled cloth until one inch thick. Cut into rounds and bake ten or twelve minutes in a hot oven (450 degrees Fahrenheit). This recipe makes ten medium-sized biscuits.

Date Ginger Cake.

4 tablespoons fat
¾ cup sugar
1 egg
½ cup sweet or sour milk
½ cup molasses
½ cup cut nuts
1 cup cut dates
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 teaspoon ginger
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon soda
1½ cups flour

Cream the fat, add the sugar gradually, add the egg and beat well. Mix the molasses and the milk. Mix and sift the dry ingredients, add alternately with the liquid to the creamed fat and sugar. Add nuts and dates. Bake in a moderate oven thirty to forty-five minutes.

It was suggested to get some adhesive tape for a few of our fair maidens especially Maggie.

Why don't they put something in the paper about me, so says our friend Doris.

Ho Hum, there happened to be a little misunderstanding between Cassie and Bob, after the meeting but I guess it is all hunky dory now.

Boy did you all see Maggie wheeling the baby buggy up the street the other day, getting in practice pretty early, Eh! What.

Seeing that spring is here the idea of going swimming is getting very monotonous.

Bob C. has a very small lap, so says our blonde member, Cassie.

Some of the girls sure believe in coming to our meetings dressed as bathing "beauties"? Not so much the beauty part!

"When you and I were young Maggie", got to be rather popular when we all started to sing after the meeting.

Helen R. went home with quite a few blisters on her imagination.

"Hurry Up", get the meeting started so we can go swimming, and can't we change the time of the meeting so we can get home earlier, "how about it Marian".

We all went home with our tummies full of goodies. So Long.

BREVITIES

Frederick Seubert, sixty-nine, a teacher in the Galena public schools for 40 years, died at his home.

Five prisoners escaped from the county jail at Mount Carmel by digging a hole through a wall. Three of the fugitives are charged with burglary and the other two with possession of a still.

Daniel Feely of Joliet, seventy-three, 23 years chairman of the Will county Democratic organization and city alderman for four years and former manager of the Cudahy Packing company in Joliet, is dead.

Robert C. Lind, seventy-nine, Rockford manufacturer, died following a four week illness. Mr. Lind was secretary of the Rockford Chair and Furniture company and president and founder of the Rockford Machine Tool company.

The body of Mrs. Nels E. Johnson, sixty-seven, was found in her home in Galesburg. She apparently had killed herself. She disappeared a year ago and was gone six months before she was discovered in Chicago, a victim of amnesia.

Charles M. Seiler, fifty-seven, connected with the Illinois division of highways, and for many years a prominent business man, died in Pana after a heart attack. His parents were among Pana's earliest settlers. He was unmarried.

William W. McManis, seventy, for many years Circuit court clerk of Bureau county and a prominent Republican, died in Princeton following an operation for hernia. Mr. McManis had been prominent in Bureau county affairs for 50 years.

Bernhard Dittmar, sixty-nine, president and one of the organizers of the Elizabeth State bank, died at his home of mumps and complications. Surviving are his daughter, Mrs. Cording, and three sisters, all of Elizabeth, and a brother, Lambert, of Montana.

Mrs. Bridget Lee McLaughlin, one hundred and three, who attributed part of her longevity to the beer she drank, died in Belleville. She is survived by a sister, Mrs. Katherine Kerwick of Carlinville, who will be one hundred and five years old in June.

Richard Lewis, ninety-one, Civil war veteran and a pioneer hotel man of Olney, died at the Illinois Soldiers and Sailors' hospital in Quincy. He was stricken with pneumonia after suffering a broken hip. Mr. Lewis was a member of Company B, One Hundred and Fifth, Infantry.

A strike of Illinois Power and Light corporation employees which deprived several communities of gas and power ended. Union officers ordered their men back to work in conformance with an injunction issued by Circuit Court Judge Thomas M. Jett of Hillsboro. Residents of Centralia and Mount Vernon were without gas during the two-week walkout.

A Circuit court jury convicted three youths in East St. Louis of the murder of William C. Moss, sixty-seven-year-old street car operator, in a holdup February 22, and fixed their punishment at death in the electric chair. The youths—Edward Balling, nineteen; John Krul, twenty-one, and William Van Buren Dedmon, twenty-five, all of Washington Park, an East St. Louis suburb—offered no testimony in their defense.

The state civil service commission has ordered reinstatement of Flo L. Cosgrove as a house mother at the Geneva training school for girls. The commission found she was let out March 5 for political reasons, which is against the law, and that she was a "capable, competent employee." The application of Melissa V. Joyner for reinstatement as house mother at the St. Charles school for boys was dismissed when she failed to appear on the date set for a hearing.

Establishment of a new department of revenue, to supervise virtually all of the revenue collecting functions of the state department, was recommended in the report of the state tax commission to Governor Horner. The report, the first rendered by the present membership of the board—John C. Martin, Dr. Simeon E. Leland and Barnett Hodess—is the most comprehensive ever published by the commission, consisting of 708 pages. While statistics given are for the year 1933, the general discussion of tax problems in the state treats events up to last summer. The recommendation of a department of revenue is one of 22 suggestions for legislative action to improve the state tax system. The report points out that at present 14 state agencies collect revenue for the state. All such functions except collection of automobile license fees and corporation organization taxes would be handled by the proposed new department. A second important recommendation is that the legislature set up machinery to provide for protests against illegal tax levies before they are extended and bills rendered to taxpayers.

B. T. Alexander, eighty-four, prominent stockman and farmer, credited with laying out Bloomington's first rural mail route, died in Bloomington of pneumonia. Mr. Alexander's parents, William C. and Eliza Jane Ayres Alexander, were pioneer settlers in central Illinois.

Two persons were killed and three injured when their motor car was hit by a freight train at a grade crossing at Monsanto. The dead are White Diamond, thirty, East St. Louis director of work relief for the IERAC, and Mrs. Myrtle Heidenrich, twenty-six, Maplewood Park.

Germany Prepares for the 1936 Olympic Games

MORE than half a million spectators can sit comfortably in this enormous sports arena, the greatest concentration of stadia, gymnasia, fields and halls ever constructed in one single unit. Nine-tenths of all the activities of the next Olympic games will be centered here. But it will not take more than thirty minutes to fill or empty the great space, with the new transportation facilities created especially for the purpose. The center bowl is the Olympic stadium. On its opposite side, looking in the picture like an open double-winged door, is the swimming stadium. The large space to the left of the Olympic stadium is the assembly field, serving also as polo grounds. It covers more than twenty-four acres and accommodates 400,000 participants and spectators. On its left side rises the "Fuhrerturm" (Leader's tower) from which the Olympic bell will ring in the games. The oval near the lower left-hand corner, above the railroad cut, is the equestrian stadium. Opposite, in the midst of the wooded section in the upper left-hand corner, is the Dietrich Eckart open-air stage. To the right of it, the small round space, is the dancing arena. At the distant right, there is a group of gymnasia, pools and training buildings, with the "House of German Sports" and an auditorium for 1,500. On the extreme right, straight over from the big center bowl, are parking spaces for ten thousand automobiles. Just beyond is the hockey stadium. In the lower right-hand corner is the railroad station "Reichssportfeld." An underground railway station, also called "Reichssportfeld," is opposite the hockey stadium. There also are basketball fields, recreation halls and many other parts.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

DANNY USES HIS WITS

Who hesitates because of fear
May lose the thing he holds most dear.

IT HAPPENS over and over again among human folks as well as among the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows. Perhaps it was because he had seen it happen more than once that Danny Meadow Mouse acted as quickly as he did. If he had stopped to think about it fear might have prevented him from doing as he did and things might have turned out quite differently and not at all so fortunate.

But Danny's wits are sharp and he has learned to use them quickly. There is nothing like danger to sharpen one's wits and Danny, as you know, is in danger a great part of the time. As he sat there peeping out of the little hole in the bank of the Smiling Pool where he had sought safety he was surrounded by danger and he knew it. It wasn't safe to leave and it wasn't safe to remain. Could anyone possibly be in worse fix?

He was doing his best to think of some way out of his troubles when he saw the Big Pickrel which had been hiding under some lily pads, swim out to the middle of the Smiling Pool and there stop close to the surface as if to enjoy the sun. Not two minutes later there was a sharp swishing sound in the air. Danny looked up to see a dark form shooting out of the sky. It was Plunger the Osprey, often called Fish Hawk. His great claws were spread to seize some one and that some one was the Big Pickrel.

With a great splash Plunger struck the water and disappeared right where the Big Pickrel had been a second before. Grandfather Frog dived from his big green lily pad with a startled "Chug-arum!" Snapper the Turtle sank from sight. Billy Mink disappeared. Reddy Fox stood up on his hind legs the better to see.

With a quick glance up to see that Redtail the Hawk was not watching, Danny darted out of his hiding place and scurried along the bank of the Smiling Pool towards the Laughing Brook. He knew that for a few minutes the attention of everybody would be fixed on Plunger. He hoped that no one would notice a scared little Meadow Mouse. He heard the water falling from Plunger and the beating of his great wings as he rose in the air, but he didn't even glance to see if Plunger had caught the Big Pickrel. He simply made those four little legs of his go as fast as they possibly could until he reached a tangle of matted grass, under which he crept, his heart going pit-a-pat, pit-a-pat. Not till then did he look back.

MOTHER'S
COOK BOOK

ITALIAN GOOD THINGS

IN ITALY a little child may prepare the meal for a workman's table. But for those with more means much elaboration is used. In recipes using grated cheese the correct mixture is one-third Gruyere and two-thirds Parmesan.

Risotto a la Milanaise.

This is a very thick soup which, with the poor, is put on the bread, thus making a substantial meal. For use at a dinner it should be considerably diluted. Cut up half of a large onion in fine pieces, add butter the size of an egg and fry to a bright brown, add one pound of washed and soaked rice and one quart of bouillon. Cook until the grains are soft but not crushed. Set the dish aside to keep hot, add one-fourth pound of grated cheese and two ounces of butter. Season with white pepper, salt if needed, and a bit of nutmeg.

Potage au Chou.

Boil one-half pound of rice and the heart of firm cabbage in boiling salted water until tender. Drain and chop the cabbage in large rough pieces. Put back into the soup pan with three ounces of butter, three onions minced, and lightly fried in the butter, add one quart of good soup stock, salt and mixed spice. Boil up for half an hour.

Set aside and add grated cheese to flavor the soup before serving.

Herring or Mackerel a l'italienne.

Split and trim, removing the heads and tails of the fish. Let the fish soak four hours in seasoned oil and vinegar. Use salt, pepper, sliced onion, and chopped parsley. Drain and dust them with flour and fry them in oil. Serve crisp and hot.

TO HELEN

By ANNE CAMPBELL

THE fabric of your friendship never wears,
Nor does it gather dust and pull apart.
It falls with tenderness upon the cares
That press, when evening comes, upon my heart.
It is a shawl to keep my shoulders warm
When all the world is cold, and chill winds blow.
It is protection from the winter storm,
And shade in summer from the hot sun's glow.

The fabric of your friendship, woven fine
With all the beauty of your lovely thought,
Embroidered in an Infinite design
By wisdom that your garnered years have taught,
Is to my life the same as the blue sky
To the tired earth—a background that is sure.
When all these lovely years have drifted by,
The fabric of your friendship will endure.

QUESTION BOX

By ED WYNN...
The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I read in the newspapers that the Statue of Liberty's right hand measures 11½ inches. Is that true and if so why did they make it just 11½ inches?

Yours truly,

HUGH GOTTA SHOWME.

Answer: Her hand was made 11½ inches long because the sculptor knew that if he made her hand 12 inches long it would have been a foot.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

For years I have watched kettles on a stove just to see the steam come out. It has always fascinated me and yet, I must admit, I cannot understand what makes it come out. Please explain to me why the steam comes out of the kettle.

Yours truly,

I. B. DARNED.

Answer: The reason steam comes out of a kettle is simply so a wife can open her husband's letters without the husband knowing it.

Dental Hygiene

The Road to Health

By DR. R. ALLEN GRIFFITH

THE SIXTH-YEAR MOLAR

THE first permanent teeth to erupt in the mouth are called the "sixth-year molars" because they come in during the sixth year.

They also might be called the most important teeth in the mouth.

These teeth are of the utmost importance, as they present a large masticating surface, and if permanently lost, always cause a collapse of the dental arch and frequently cause the face to be contracted. To the orthodontist (a dentist who straightens teeth) they are the key to the arch. By looking at their occlusion he is able to determine if the jaws are in their proper relation to each other.

The premature loss of these teeth is a calamity to any individual and they should be watched with jealous care. They come in during the most irresponsible period of childhood, and no child of that age can be expected to pay any attention to the care of these important teeth without the watchful guidance of the parents.

If you care for the preservation of your child's health, there is every reason in the world why the baby teeth should receive as much care and attention as the permanent teeth. There is no possible excuse, no reason under the sun why either the baby teeth or the sixth-year molars should be neglected. The baby teeth are easily forgotten by the child where they are so healthy and clean that they are lost in the natural way. If properly cared for, they are lost as nature intended. They are not so easily forgotten by the child when they are allowed to become a jagged, broken, decayed and abscessed lot and are lost through pain and sleeplessness.

The uncleanness of the baby teeth is surely transferred to the sixth-year molars, and the memory of pain endured and the physical scars will be carried through life. A child whose teeth are allowed to go to wreck and ruin through ignorance or neglect on the part of parents, who are responsible for both his mental and physical welfare, has every right to hold them responsible for his suffering. The baby teeth should remain as white and sound as little pearls. It is absolutely criminal for parents to neglect the baby teeth. It is worse to neglect the sixth-year molars.

The last of the baby teeth are not lost until the tenth or eleventh year. The sixth-year molars, which are the first of the permanent teeth, have been in the mouth four or five years by this time.

OUR DUTY

WHEN all is said and done, health is the greatest asset that a human being can possess. There are many other things that are conducive to happiness, but they sink into second place when we think of a diseased or crippled body.

Most any physician who was on the draft board during the World war, will tell you of the large number of young men who were physically unfit to be classed as A-1 men, and they will also tell you that most of these physical defects could have been prevented or eradicated in youth. These were the school children of yesterday.

Our schools are wasting enormous sums in educating, or trying to educate, the children who are handicapped by ill health, when the expenditure of much smaller amounts in a judicious health program would produce an enormous saving in economy and efficiency. A dollar spent promptly in a timely, constructive effort to conserve a child's health will be more fruitful for the child and for human society than will a thousand dollars applied twenty years later.

Better than 90 per cent—24,000,000—of our school children have defective teeth, and all defective teeth are injurious to health. Some of these defective teeth are deadly menaces to their owners.

Seventy-five per cent—17,000,000—of the school children of the United States have physical defects which are potentially or actually detrimental to health, and most of these defects are remediable.

One of the most appalling revelations of recent years is the conclusion based on unrefuted evidence that the rural school children of the country are handicapped by more physical defects than pupils in city schools. While several significant causes seem to be responsible for this condition, the present inferiority of country children depends in part upon the fact that city children receive more health care than those in rural regions.

Where an intensive study of mouth conditions has been carried out, it has been proved that dental attention alone will cure at least 50 per cent of the other troubles. Most of the organic heart troubles, glandular diseases, malnutrition and tuberculosis are caused by defective teeth.

It has been said that if all the dentists in the United States were sent to New York, they could not adequately care for the persons with defective teeth in that city.

While all these facts are well known, doesn't it seem as if a little money should be spent upon the physical as well as the mental welfare of the children in our schools?

"IN DIJON—"

By JACK DE WITT

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service.

MIKE DELANEY of the plain clothes detail flicked at his immaculate civilian suit with a whisk brush.

"Going out deep tonight, Mike?" the question was tossed at him in friendly carelessness by Lieutenant Reese.

"Takin' Ann to dinner," replied the plain clothes man, "and no gags from you."

Lieutenant Reese looked up from the flimsies, reports and "Wanted" circulars he had been perusing, and his large face beamed.

"Ann's a swell kid, and no foolin'. But—ever been in Dijon, Mike?"

"Dijon?" queried the plain clothes officer. His lean, clean-shaven face came alive with a happy memory. "You mean Dijon in France? Sure, I was there. Right after the war. Why?"

"Ever meet the Bluebeard of Dijon?" asked the lieutenant, without humor. Mike Delaney eyed the officer suspiciously.

"What you getting at?" he wanted to know before committing himself.

"Just this," the lieutenant thrust a paper towards him. "First pickup order we ever got from a foreign country. And them frogs go for rewards, too. See the figure? Fifteen hundred American dollars reward for the Bluebeard of Dijon."

Mike Delaney read hurriedly. "They seem to think this mug's in this town," he said to the lieutenant. "Yeah," agreed the desk officer without enthusiasm, "but they have been trying to trail him for five years. No chance pickin' him now. Killed a lotta women, didn't he? I didn't read it careful."

Mike Delaney was reading aloud—"Wanted for Murder. Nicholas Lamaire. The Bluebeard of Dijon. Killed six women and fled before collecting insurance for last victim. The trail of this man has been followed in Spain, Italy, Australia, Hawaii, and Trinidad—where it was lost five years ago. Recently a letter was received by a Dijon acquaintance, mailed in your city by the subject of this circular. No photograph of Lamaire is available. When last known in Dijon—where he spent the greater part of his life in the restaurant business, he was 5 feet 9 inches tall. Weight 160 pounds. Dark hair and eyes. His appearance has undoubtedly changed considerably but he may be readily identified by a triangular scar, result of a knife wound, two inches below the point of his right shoulder blade. He may be employed in a restaurant in your city and he may be the proprietor of a restaurant of the better type."

Delaney paused in his reading. The lieutenant observed: "How you going to identify him from that description after these years? Got fat by now, if he works in restaurants."

Delaney was still thinking of Dijon when he reached the sidewalk. Suddenly he laughed aloud.

It was 7:30 when Mike Delaney presented his broad shoulders in the doorway of a neat suburban cottage.

Ann Morgan met him at the door. "Late, Mr. Delaney. Fifteen minutes late. Give an account."

Mike Delaney said nothing. He usually went tongue-tied for the first few minutes in Ann Morgan's company anyway. When his little coupe was nosing through downtown traffic again, and when Ann had cuddled comfortably close to him, he said half musically:

"If we had fifteen hundred dollars we could get that bungalow in the Sunset addition and make a good, big down payment to the real estate people—"

"Mike Delaney," the girl interrupted him, "quit worrying about that bungalow."

The subject ended there. Ann was dreaming her dreams; Mike was dreaming his. Both dreams were very similar when he piloted her through the garishly lighted doorway of a downtown restaurant. Gilded letters on the restaurant window announced that the place specialized in French cooking.

When the waiter brought soup and turned with a dexterous flip of his napkin to leave the booth, a sharp ejaculation from Mike Delaney brought him about swiftly.

Mike Delaney was holding by the tall—suspended above his plate—the soup-drenched body of a dead mouse.

"I'll show it to every customer in the place," he spluttered.

"M'seur, M'seur—" stammered the waiter, but before the servant could control his quivering vocal chords he was brushed roughly aside by the head waiter.

"Please—please," he begged, "I will see the management. Please. Fifteen dollars, twenty dollars—please no noise, mister."

Eventually Mike Delaney allowed himself to be placated by none other than the proprietor.

As they walked toward another restaurant, Ann said: "But you shouldn't have taken his money, Mike. You should—"

"Teach him a lesson," her companion assured her. "Forty dollars is a lot of money to a mug like that. I'll let him suffer until tomorrow then take it back."

In the next restaurant Mike Delaney again chose a booth. The waiter went through the preliminaries with expertness and dispatch. After the soup was brought, he, too, whirled in sudden alarm.

Waiters, headwaiters and cafe proprietors that night seemed to have rehearsed a little act. Sums of money ranging from ten dollars up to the original forty, went into Mike Delaney's pocket and the curtain fell on the serio-comedy with Ann and her escort on the sidewalk seeking another eating house.

It was as they were approaching the sixth restaurant that Ann Morgan turned an amazed and hurt expression upon Mike Delaney.

"If that's your way to get that fifteen hundred dollars you say we need, I can assure you, Mr. Delaney, we no longer need it."

She stepped into a taxicab parked at the curb and was gone.

Saddened, alone, Mike Delaney entered still another restaurant.

The act proceeded. The head waiter came and went. And then there was a hitch in the play. An irate, pig-eyed gentleman came crowding to the booth.

"Ah," said this one, "the old mouse trick." He filled the booth with his bulk. Mike Delaney rose and seemed to be estimating his chance for a fast getaway.

But the proprietor had another idea. "Call the police, Oscar," he said over his shoulder to the hovering, alarmed waiter. "And you, wise guy, sit down." He pushed Mike Delaney back into his seat.

"It's the old, what you call, shake-down trick," resumed the cafe proprietor viciously, "and you go to jail for it."

A uniformed policeman was elbowing his way through a knot of curious restaurant patrons near the booth.

"What's wrong?" the officer asked, and then he saw Mike Delaney. The policeman's wondering gaze traveled from Delaney's face to the now almost purple one of the cafe owner.

"You've seen that trick before," Delaney was saying slowly and with a menace in his voice that the cafe man did not miss. "You've seen it in Dijon. A gang of carefree American soldiers used to pull it there to get a little cash."

At the word Dijon the eyes of the fat man suddenly glistened.

"It's a lie, Dijon—I do not know what it means. Arrest that man, officer—arr—" but his voice trailed off. It was his turn now to look furtively for an avenue of escape.

"... and hurry off his shirt," instructed Mike Delaney, at the police headquarters a few minutes later. "I want to see that scar before I go take Ann to dinner, return some dough I collected—and do some heavy explaining."

Traditional Life Span of 70 Passed by Many

Revolutionary conclusions about why people live longer than they did a generation ago and may be expected to live still longer in the future are suggested by new studies of death-rate statistics in Great Britain by three Scottish mathematicians, Col. A. G. McKendrick, Dr. W. O. Kermack and Dr. P. L. McKintay, all of Edinburgh, says the Providence Journal.

One conclusion is that the chief cause of how long an individual lives is what kind of constitution is acquired during the first 10 to 15 years of life. Another is that living to be ninety or one hundred promises not to be improbable instead of the traditional limit of three score and ten.

Sanitation and medical science have greatly decreased deaths among children and young people, so that the percentage of middle-aged people has been increasing. There has been no direct evidence, however, that the old people are living any longer or that the maximum span of human life is lengthening.

Many experts have suspected, indeed, that this life span might decrease, as one result of keeping alive many children who are naturally weak and cannot be expected to live long anyway.

The new Scottish investigation is the first evidence that this pessimistic conclusion may be wrong. British children born in each decade since 1845 are found to live a little longer than children born in the previous decade.

Nothing seems to influence this except the year of birth, which implies that what happens to children under fifteen seems to be the chief factor in living long or dying early. Extensions of the same computations to future decades imply that substantially increased percentages of the people now being born may expect to live beyond ninety.

Derby Races

Derby races were inaugurated by the Earl of Derby in England in 1780 and they are still annual affairs at Epsom, Surrey, England, in which none but three-year-olds race for a generous purse. The most important race at any track is sometimes called the Derby but the Kentucky and other specified American races are patterned after that of England. British pronunciation—Dar-by—is derived from the old spelling of Lord Derby's territory, Deorabi. Of late there has been a tendency in America to adopt the English pronunciation.

Sables' Luxury Life

Sables, destined to provide fur coats, lead a life of luxury at the nursery established in the forest at Barguzin, eastern Siberia. Here is their menu: Breakfast (7 a. m.): biscuits, oatmeal, or rice with milk; luncheon (1 p. m.): minced meat with vegetables and cedar nuts. Once a month the sables are weighed. Those which are not up to the mark receive extra food—eggs and cream.

Lobbyists Active

Washington.—Much ado is being made around Washington again over lobbyists. It is true that there are now perhaps more lobbyists in Washington than at any time in the last fifteen years. It is true they are influencing legislation, and I think it can be said without fear of contradiction that lobbyists are responsible for a portion of the balking tactics in congress.

Existence of this unusual condition in Washington carries more significance, however, than just the fact that special interests or individual interests are trying to protect themselves. From a good many sources I gather the opinion that the condition means the President's power has weakened.

It is to be remembered that when Mr. Roosevelt carried his New Deal into the White House and led the largest Democratic majority ever to control the national legislative body, that very fact thwarted lobbying. Very few of the so-called special interests had the courage to button hole individual representatives or senators to plead their cause. These representatives and senators were looking to White House leadership; their fate rested on the New Deal, and they were unable accurately to gauge what public sentiment would be if they openly disagreed with Presidential orders. In those days, the corridors of the Capitol and the house and senate office buildings were virtually deserted of petitioners—for that is what a lobbyist is.

To the extent that lobbyists operated in the early days of the Roosevelt administration, they sought to influence Presidential decision and the activities of the brain trust and underlings who drafted the Presidential programs. Once these programs had been submitted to congress, the opposition to them largely subsided and members jumped to the crack of the Presidential whip. As stated above, individual members were afraid to go against White House orders and lobbyists were afraid to combat the President's popularity.

But a year ago, various interests throughout the country began to sense a feeling that they could again talk with members of congress safely. They began organizing their representations here as they formerly had enjoyed, and little by little broadened the scope of their activities. A singular part about the present condition is the mushroom growth of the lobbyists. Supplementing their growth has been an unusual fearlessness. They are busy pushing all kinds of causes, good and bad.

Some forces estimate there are close to five hundred different groups and organizations actively petitioning congress to do this or that according to their lights. There are such gigantic lobbies as that of organized labor, agriculture and the American Legion. There are lobbies for religious and racial groups. The power interests at the moment bulk large with their lobbying activities. Individual lines of industry have their representatives here in numbers. The railroads, for example, have headquarters here for their Association of American Railroads and it is also the headquarters for the Short-line Railroad association. The bankers maintain a legislative committee of the American Bankers' association here, and even scientific groups have their people treading water in the halls of congress, watching and waiting to be sure that nothing detrimental to their interests is done by the legislators.

It will be recalled that several weeks ago Mr. Roosevelt let loose one of the bitterest messages he has ever sent to congress in denunciation of the activities of the power lobby. At that time, the vicious character of his accusations against the power interests was attributed by many observers to his intense feeling that public utility holding companies should be abolished. He felt that cliques of financiers were taking advantage of innocent investors and he wanted to tell the country about it.

Sees Power Waning

Now, however, it develops that he was shooting not only at the power group but at all so-called special interests which were seeking to protect themselves from what they regarded as flagrant violations of property rights of the established business practices. It must be said that for a few days, the President's message did have the effect of slowing down lobbying activities but the lobbyists had tasted of their own power. They are not to be frightened by any Presidential attack nor by the threat of Senator Black of Alabama to force through legislation compelling lobbyists in Washington to register. As a matter of cold fact, it is my conviction that Senator Black will find himself thoroughly circumvented in any move he may make to press for action on what is generally regarded as a ridiculous piece of legislation. It is a thirty-year-old proposal, anyway.

It all goes to show that, at least among those with the courage of their convictions, President Roosevelt is not as powerful as he was in the first year of his reign. Balking tactics in congress over the public works relief bill was but the outward sign of courage underneath. I have reported to you heretofore that there were mutterings and expressions of discontent within the President's vast majority in the house and senate. While the malcontents are not openly criticizing the President, they are able to accomplish their purpose by delay and disagreement over what ordinarily would be very minor details.

I believe it is the consensus also that the activities of petitioners for their rights are responsible to a large extent for the creation of numerous blocs in congress. It has been observed by numerous publicists that if there is danger of Fascism in the United States, it lies in this rise of blocs in congress. The natural result is to replace and break up the two old established parties. Thus far in this session there has been evidence time after time of bloc activities, one against another. This condition results in legislative trades, not all of which result in good or even well-written legislation.

When the President came through the biennial election last fall with his majorities increased, there were those who insisted that he would have his will with congress and no questions asked. They did not reckon, however, with the potential strength of the various interests watching congressional activities. I do not believe that a careful analysis of the activities of most of these lobbyists will show improper relations between them and members of congress. They are simply asserting the right of every individual, namely, the privilege to tell his representative or senator what his opinion is. Certainly, there is a growing feeling that Mr. Roosevelt gained little or nothing when he attacked the power interests, and over their shoulder all other representation in Washington.

Now that President Roosevelt has title to $4,800,000,000 to spend pretty much as he pleases,

How Will It Be Spent?

much as he pleases, the question is heard around Washington more and more frequently, what is he going to do with it? The truth is that administration plans for utilizing this vast sum of money are so nebulous that no one can tell, even the officials themselves, to what uses it will be put. One hears about attacking the problem of soil erosion so that the destruction by dust storms will occur no more, and there is talk of many public works projects. When one tries to find out details of these, however, he is promptly confronted by a stone wall, either of silence or of a frank statement that only the outlines have thus far been considered.

Conversations over luncheon tables in Washington seem to indicate that actual spending of this money in any appreciable sum will not get under way for some months. In fact, there seems to be ground for belief that nothing of substantial character will take place in a spending way before next winter. And, if that is true the comment suggests, the great appropriation will be effective only in a political way next spring and summer.

It should be remembered that the amount voted the President in this one resolution which is to be spent practically at his direction is greater than the total expenditure of the federal government for any year from 1922 to 1931.

Effective Lobbying

With further references to lobbying activities, it is made to appear that two organizations have done an especially good job. I refer to the operations of the American Legion office in Washington and its fight for the veterans' bonus, and the activity of the various agricultural and farm organizations who have been fighting off certain phases of railroad legislation.

The farmers, according to the best information I can get, are opposed to federal regulation of interstate bus and truck business because they feel the proposed legislation will hamper farm-to-market hauling. I suspect that the bus and truck group have persuaded the farm representatives to oppose regulatory measures for busses and trucks on the basis of misunderstanding. I have made numerous inquiries of legislative drafting experts and of house and senate leaders respecting the point at issue and all have assured me that the proposed federal regulation will in no way apply to farm-to-market hauling.

While the point made here is not at all important and when farm operators of trucks understand it they will doubtless shy away from the position they have taken, it illustrates how one organization will attract many followers to its ranks who actually ought not to be there.

Now as to the bonus proposition, it ought to be said that the Roosevelt administration is in a hole. So well has the American Legion done its job that there is no doubt in my mind at the moment respecting the outcome. There will be bonus legislation passed by congress at this session. Whether it will be signed or vetoed by President Roosevelt depends entirely upon the nature of the bill as it finally is passed.

HIGHLY POPULAR "FAN" RAG RUG

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

This "Fan" rag rug has attracted a lot of attention and to our knowledge quite a few home rug makers have made one or more like it. It must be seen to be appreciated. Made up in brilliant colors, the panels in alternating light and dark shades and the center of dark green and red, this rug is bound to catch the attention of anyone upon entering the room. This model measures 58 inches across and 30 inches deep, and requires about four pounds of material to crochet. The ten panels are made first and then crocheted together. The center half circle is made to fit opening for it and in turn is slip stitched into space.

This beautiful rug is one of the twenty handmade rugs shown in colors in rug book No. 24.

If handmade rag rugs interest you send us 15c for this book of rugs with instructions, and you will receive it by mail postpaid.

GENERAL STORE RESUMES PLACE IN COMMUNITY

The general store is coming back, according to the reports of wholesale grocers from the Middle West, but it is a different institution from that which had a prominent place in the earlier days of merchandising and community life.

No longer is the cracker barrel open, the pot-bellied stove is conspicuous by its absence, and the box, half filled with sawdust, that was a combination cuspidor and waste-basket, is no more, says the Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch.

But in these newer general stores you can buy anything from a bottle of patent medicine to a postage stamp. To term them department stores is not correct, even though the atmosphere of the establishment in the old general store is gone.

The proprietors are in some cases men whose forebears were the storekeepers of the district in the days when houses and other buildings were made of the tough prairie sod.

The idea for small town merchandising needs is thus proven sound again. Not alone did the store supply the wants of the customers in the early days, but it was the forum of discussion on politics, religion and the state of life, manners and morals in the community in which the store was located. And the proprietor was as like as not to be the leader in community politics and in some cases religion.

Nowadays there are many other places where people may meet to discuss things. The movies provided the entertainment and the automobile the means to move about for wider horizons.

Yet many of the older generation would give a great deal to have the chance to spend a few hours again in that old general store they remember from the days of their youth.

WOUND IN HEART NO LONGER HELD AS SURE DEATH

To be shot or stabbed through the heart used to be considered certain death, and, though it is still a very effective way of killing either man or beast, research has proved that even the heart can be dealt with surgically.

A domestic servant in Mexico City, while going about her work, fell from the second floor into the street, and a knife she was carrying pierced her heart and remained embedded. In what seemed a hopeless effort to save her, the doctors at the nearest Red Cross center removed both knife and heart. For five minutes they were engaged in sewing up the heart and replacing it, yet so far from life being extinct, the patient, in spite of a serious pleurisy complication, recovered and returned to her duties apparently little the worse for her accident.

During the war, a man in hospital complained of severe pains in the region of the heart. X-rays showed a hard substance, and in the course of the operation which followed, the surgeon had to put his hand behind the heart and take away with his fingers the piece of shrapnel—about the size of a cent—which was there. During this process air was pumped into the man's lungs, and he recovered.

A rabbi was stabbed by a negro through the heart. The surgeons exposed it, and a saline solution was injected to replace the blood between pulsations. The left ventricle was then stitched up, and the patient's life was saved.

About the same time much interest was evoked by the successful operation of stitching up the heart of a Leeds butcher who was accidentally stabbed. A still more complicated case occurred of a man who was brought into a hospital with a revolver shot wound. The heart was exposed, and a bullet, found embedded in the thick flesh of the apex, was successfully removed.—London Tit-Bits.

News From Springfield

By Bernice T. Van der Vries
Representative Seventh District

Hotel rooms were at a premium last week in Springfield. In addition to groups such as the League of Women Voters, Public Utility officials, insurance men and lobbyists for all types of legislation, there were several hundred women attending the State Convention of the P. E. O. Sisterhood. Hotel lobbies were crowded with people discussing taxation bills, the insurance code, the eight hour day for women workers, permanent registration and motor drivers license. The halls of the State House were busy places.

The Permanent Registration Bill was given a hearing in a subcommittee of the Elections Committee. The bill was reported back to the Elections Committee without recommendations for passage. It will have a hearing before the whole committee soon. In the meantime, Representative Koehler of Cairo has introduced a Permanent Registration Bill applicable to the entire State.

The Women's Eight Hour Bill was reported favorably out of the Industrial Affairs Committee of the House on Tuesday.

On Wednesday, all amendments to the new Insurance Code were submitted when the bill was called for second reading. Hearings on the amendments will be held on Wednesday. There are probably around a hundred proposed amendments, all of which will consume considerable time in discussions.

The bills providing four year terms for all municipal officials were called for second reading on Wednesday, and amendments were offered which permitted municipalities not wishing to adopt four year terms to submit the question by referendum to the voters of that municipality. Every type of municipality is included in the bills which were submitted early in the session and which were rapidly advanced in order to make them effective for the April elections. Considerable opposition developed because the bills did not carry referenda and the bills were held up until after the elections.

Late on Wednesday afternoon, the Senate passed the increased Sales Tax Bill and the House did not formally adjourn until after the passage of the bill in the Senate so that the bill could be advanced to second reading in the House. What effect the message of the Governor sent to the House on Tuesday dealing with the necessity for relief appropriations will have on the bill is uncertain.
